Q) In the Rig Veda, there is a famous set of verses that is popular with many western scholars. Instead of talking about how the world was made with certainty, it asks questions about it. This old verse shows that people in India were thinking hard about the world and how it began, even before others did. Carl Sagan once mentioned this verse in the work “Cosmos” because it shows how people in India have always been curious about the universe. What is this hymn that starts with questions about where we all come from?
